Of Local Interest

FUNERAL OF HOSEA GREEN-HAW.—The funeral of Hosea Greenhaw will be held this morning, at 9:30 o'clock, in the parlors of Mohr & Driscoll. Interment will be in Greenwood cemetery.

RAILROAD MAN VISITS PHOENIX.—M. F. Van Horn, district passenger agent for the Pennsylvania lines, with headquarters at Los Angeles, was a Phoenix visitor yesterday.

GONE ON VACATION.—Harry Welch, secretary of the board of trade, left last night for his summer vacation in the east. He has in mind the visiting of many places, but Chicago will be the central point from which he will make his side excursions.

K. OF P. FINDS TEMPORARY HOME.—The Knights of Pythias, which suffered the burning of its lodge room by fire, has found asylum in the Elks building, on Washington street, and hereafter will meet in Elks hall every Friday evening, the usual meeting night of the lodge in Phoenix. The lodge is prosperous and expects to initiate new candidates at tonight's meeting.

FINE PEACHES.—W. H. Yockey, who has a ranch, three miles southwest of the city, on the Buckeye road, yesterday brought to the board of trade some fine specimens of the Elberta peach, weighing half a pound each. They came from a ten-acre orchard, only two years old.

LAYING NEW RAILS.—The work of laying newer and heavier steel for the trackage of the Phoenix city railway, through the business section, proceeding the work of paving, was begun yesterday, or rather the work of preparing for it. The old track was torn up for a distance of two blocks, between Second and Fourth avenues, and teams are excavating for the laying of the new ties and rails. During this work the railway service is necessarily a little disturbed, as there is but one track in use through the central part of the city, for cars going both ways, they are manipulated to cause as little delay as possible.

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM.—George Biddle, of Akron, Ohio, is suffering disillusionment from love's young dream, and the loss of $75 in good cash money, a festive Phoenix girl being the author of his pain in both instances. He confided his trouble to the city marshal of Phoenix in a letter that he fondly hoped would bring him back his heart's desire, or at least the money, and perhaps both, but the marshal, after an investigation, reported to him that there was nothing doing. Biddle says he met the young woman in question somewhere on a train, and a flirtation was begun that developed into a correspondence after the girl returned to Phoenix. The correspondence grew into affection on the part of Biddle and into an engagement to which both consented. Then came a little talk about money matters and Biddle forwarded a check for seventy-five dollars. Thereafter he received no more letters and when doubt turned to suspicion and finally to mental anguish, he wrote to the marshal to try and locate the girl and make a report as to her whereabouts, conduct, health, happiness and general situation. The marshal did so and finding she had been married a few days ago to a young man in this city, and that they were now apparently happy, he wrote Biddle that he was no longer in the game, and it was not worth while to disturb the present happiness of the Phoenix couple, unless he had some legal grounds for the recovery of his cash advanced.

FEWER THINGS BETTER IN OUR ROOMS.

Writing to Suburban Life of her summer freedom in simple ten life a lady tells how the experience showed her that she could dispense with many useless tasks in her city life as well. She says:

First there came to me one of the wisest of the sayings of William Morris, "Have nothing in your home which you do not know to be useful, or believe to be beautiful." This came to me on a new train of thought, and, in my mind's eye, I went through every room in my house, to see what could be dispensed with according to this standard. The living room and parlor were the greatest losers, or rather gainers, from this mental house cleaning. I saw there the host of bric-a-brac accumulated from gifts and trivial purchases, which in my inmost heart I knew were neither useful nor beautiful. So, with my eye on my mountain for counsel and strength, I did these things up carefully in bundles some to go to the junk shop and others where I thought they would give pleasure for a time. And I breathed a sigh of relief at the thought of how much the work of my sweeping day would be simplified, for one of the reasons for my life's labor is that there is nothing superfluous to care for. Even many of the pictures on the walls are worthless as real things of beauty, and would much better be discarded.

THE INDIVIDUAL BEER GLASS.
"A glass of beer, bartender, and here's my own glass! None of those others for mine!"

With these words a well known saloon keeper ordered a drink, and at the same time drew a medium size shell glass from his coat pocket. The bartender's surprise was so great he nearly dropped to the floor, and the customers gaped with wide open mouths, while the hangers-on fell back against the wall.

"Fill 'er up again, bartender!" said the artifice man.

Just before starting to do as commanded, the bartender made for the water trough to rinse the glass.

"No you don't, bartender; hold on there! That glass is not to be rinsed," the "art" further spoke.

Well, this was almost the limit, but the bartender checked the hand that was making for the water trough and guided it to the beer spigot. He filled it up and set it on the bar, after which he hurried away, forgetting to get his money. He was too confused.

This man has been carrying his own glass for two years now, and when one breaks or gets smashed in his pocket he buys another—Baltimore Sun.

HE BET WITH EDISON.

Though the Inventor Lost the Other Man Was Injured.

Fishguard, Wales—Former Comp-troller Herman A. Metz of New York landed from the Mauretania with his right hand bandaged as a result of an experimental bet with Inventor Thos. A. Edison.

In the smoking room the other night Mr. Edison, Mr. Metz, Cooper Hewitt, novelist Henry Jarvis, J. Ser-geant Cram, W. R. Wilcox, Bainbridge Coby and other well known New Yorkers were discussing and illustrating simple tricks with models cut from newspapers. Mr. Metz varied the entertainment by showing how easy it is to remove the cork from a wine bottle by dropping it head downward on the floor.

Mr. Edison bet him the price of a bottle that he could not do it.

Mr. Metz won, but on his repeating the experiment the bottle broke and cut so deep a gash on his right hand that he bled profusely. Dr. O. M. Leiser of New York took several stitches in the hand. Mr. Metz is all right, but will not have the use of his right hand for several days.

Mr. Edison played like a boy on board the ship. He mixed with the passengers, flew kites and played shuffle-board. After Mr. Metz hurt his hand Mr. Edison said to him:

"You see I didn't try to kill you or I would have used electricity. It is more deadly than glass." From the New York World.

A LOW CALL.

"I understand," began a friend entering into conversation with a clergyman of our acquaintance. "I understand that the people of Jimville are anxious to have you take charge of the new church they have just built."

"There has been some talk about it, I believe," answered the reverend gentleman, "but I don't think that I shall go there."

"Don't you think that the Lord is calling you to this new field of endeavor?"

"No, I don't believe he is. If he were he would certainly put it into their hearts to offer me a much bigger salary. I perceive no divine call and I shall continue in my present field."

"Cementation" is a new method of engineering that has been developed in the water laden ground of a French coal district. The marls and chalk overlying the coal measures are so fissured that ordinary shaft sinking is impracticable and a cheaper plan than that of freezing the ground before boring has been sought. Half a dozen holes were first drilled in a circle around the site of the proposed shaft. Cement grouting was then forced into the holes, and in a short time all fissures and interstices were filled, a solid wall being formed. Within the space thus enclosed a shaft could be sunk in the usual way.
